The Administrative Continues Decision in Saudi Arabia A Comparative Study

Saeed sad al mabdi

Abstract

This study highlights the concept of administrative continuous decision and the distinction that characterizes it from other types of decisions, as it is considered as an administrative decision that subjects to the legal regulations which in general govern other administrative decisions. 'This study also aims at defining the variations in administrative decisions between judiciary and organizational authority.

The study comprises an introduction, preface, three chapters and conclusion. The introductory part shows the importance of the study, its objectives and the followed scientific methodology, whereas it depends on analytical descriptive approach through inducting and abstracting all thoughts reported in the interpretation of administrative books. 'The reasons behind choosing the topic are followed by a preface including the definition of continuous decision, its forms, the distinction between it and normal decision; and its characteristics, types and legitimacy. The title of first chapter is "The Concept of Administrative Continuous Decision", where it tackles the concept of administrative continuous decisions, its forms, the distinction between this decision and normal one, the preparatory works, generalization circulars, internal procedures and finally the study of negative decision, its conditions, regulations and presumptive authority. The second chapter's title is "The Judiciary Control Over The Administrative Continuous Decision" including the reasons of contestation, its time, incapacity of continuous decision by contestation time, inactivity of executing continuous decision and cases of compensations. The third chapter came under the tide "The Basic Elements of Administrative Decision" which includes the basic elements of administrative continuous decision and the field of risks' responsibility in continuous decision. At the end, I have concluded this study with the most important results that this study has reached to. One of these results stating that the administrative continuous decision is considered as a decision which subjects to legal regulations of administrative decisions. Further, the administrative continuous decision is not limited to the form of negative decisions. The study also has revealed that the administrative continuous decision is not bound by way or another by the time of contestation regarding cancellation specified by legislator to make cancellation within the contestation, otherwise the lawsuit shall be rejected. A group of recommendations were suggested in this study which concentrate on the importance of the scientific researches in the field of administrative continuous decision.
